Pacific Seminar I was designed to introduce students to the intellectual life of the university through a critical examination of the question “What is a good society?” Through this course students will be able to develop their writing, critical thinking, and oral presentation skills. Pacific Seminar I will broaden social awareness and encourage engaged citizenship through exposure to a variety of disciplinary frameworks and methodologies. Most of all, this course will help to promote a rich intellectual experience and excitement for learning at the university and beyond.

What Is A Good Society?

University of the Pacific 2007